KIDNEY POISONS

Save the Life Spring and Make Putrid the Health Fountain—South American Kidney Cure Cleanses and Purifies.

If the kidneys fail to do their work other organs become involved; poisons generate—circulate through, and violate the whole system. Disease and disaster are as sure as sunrise if neglected. South American Kidney Cure acts on the kidneys like magic. It's a liquid and attacks the ailing parts, quickly stops the spreading of disease, drives out the foreign substances, and brings this important organ back to a healthy normal state. It's a kidney specific.

What Scrofula Is

Scrofula is a disease as old as antiquity. It has been handed down for generations and is the same today as in early times. It is emphatically a disease of the blood, and the only way to cure it is by purifying the blood. That is just what Hood's Sarsaparilla does in every case where it is given a faithful trial. It eradicates all impurities from the blood, and cures the sores, boils, pimples and all forms of skin disease due to scrofula taints in the blood. Hood's Sarsaparilla has won the grateful praise of vast numbers of people by its grand and complete cures. Don't allow scrofula to develop in your blood. Cure it at once by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Ottawa, October 8th.—A great outcry has been made in a section of the press during the last couple of weeks on account of the discrimination enforced by Germany against Canadian wheat, as an outcome of the denunciation by Great Britain of the German and Belgian treaties at the instigation of the Canadian Government. This discrimination is alleged to have seriously affected the wheat trade between Canada and Germany and the disadvantage thus occasioned to Canadian exporters is of course instantly placed to the credit of the Government.

The fact appears to be entirely overlooked that the action of the Imperial authorities in this matter was received with loud acclamations and every indication of approval at the time it occurred. The Imperial Federal League now the British Empire League, an institution that stands for all that is ultra-loyal and Imperialistic, approved the denunciation with almost extravagant enthusiasm, and Sir Charles Tupper, himself a past president of the Canadian branch of the organization, Mr. McNeill, and other prominent imperialists in the Opposition ranks joined hands with the supporters of the Government in approving of the denunciation. It is not complimentary to the intelligence of these gentlemen to suppose for one moment that they did not foresee the very natural attempt at reprisal with which Germany would meet the action of the Home government.

A GREAT MATTER TRULY.

After all the matter is a small one in the sum total, and while no market is too insignificant to be wantonly cut off, the small sum of $12,600, which Germany took in wheat from the Dominion last year, is not worthy of the prominence that has been given to it, particularly when there is a ready market elsewhere for all the wheat that Canada has so far been able to produce. The immense improvement in Canada's position in the old world more than offsets this slight disadvantage a thousand times, and it is in the consideration of the year's national business as a whole that the results of a policy must be considered. Viewed in this practical and only fair way, the Government has no occasion to fear the verdict, nor the country the results of the changed tariff conditions.

THE MAJOR'S EMPHATIC DENIAL.

The long expected official report of Major Walsh, ex-administrator of the Yukon, has been submitted to the Minister of the Interior, and its contents made public. The most interesting section of it just now, is that which deals with the grist of charges against the Government Officials in the Yukon. Of these Major Walsh speaks tersely and emphatically:—"These reports are absolutely false. During my stay in Dawson I several times requested the public to send in any charges they had and also the request was made at a mass meeting but not a single charge was presented." Further down he repeats "I sent out inquiries everywhere, asking the people if they had any charges against officials to hand them in to me, and they would be thoroughly investigated. Not one charge was laid against any official of the Government." Continuing the Major points out that this spirit of reticence under the restraint of law and authority, is the usual experience of a country where the oldest residents were unaccustomed to that sort of thing and the new comers, of whom he says 20,000 of all nationalities flocked in, in a few weeks time, were dissatisfied with that which was different to what they had been accustomed to in their own country, continuing "when regulations could not be made to suit all of these varied elements of population, the officials, and the law

The baby who cuts his teeth hard will be successful in every way.
If a little child is extremely fond of cheese, he will be rich when old.
A child born in August will have many presents and give them all away.
A baby born with two colors of eyes will be successful in all its undertakings.

UNSEATING Mr. Aylsworth is all right as far as it goes, but winning the seat is a horse of another color.

WINNIPEG warns us not to get numerous. Napanee doesn't possess the only combination that was worked.

If this robbery business keeps up it will soon be in order to inquire, Is that bank clerk out on bail or only under suspicion?

WHAT will it profit the Conservatives of Lennox to spend a big round sum of money to unseat Mr. Aylsworth only to be defeated in the bye-election?

THE petition against Mr. Aylsworth's election was withdrawn without costs. The Conservatives of Lennox did not lay claim to the seat. These facts are significant.

HER Gracious Majesty, Queen Victoria, has been getting her name in the papers. A correspondent stationed at Balmoral learned that a horse had shied while her Majesty was out driving. This was sufficient and next morning the daily papers all over the world had a graphic account of the Queen's narrow escape from death in a runaway and the bravery and fortitude exhibited by her Majesty in the hour of danger. It now transpires there was no runaway accident and it has cost the Queen $100 telegraphing lenials of the report in answer to the congratulatory messages which poured in upon her.

LAFAYETTE'S GOOD MEMORY.

He Remembered a Room He Had Not Seen For Fifty Years.

Washington's headquarters at Newburg, a small old fashioned Dutch house, fronting the Hudson river, is now owned by the state of New York. In repairing its care was taken to preserve the ancient form of every part that was renewed. The front door opens into a large, square room, which was used by Washington for his public audience and as a dining hall. It is remarkable for having seven doors and only one window.

In a recent publication, "A Godchild of Washington," the author quotes from the New York Mirror for 1834 an interesting anecdote connected with this room. Its authority is Colonel Nicholas Fish, a soldier of the Revolution and the father of Hon. Hamilton Fish, secretary of state under President Grant.

Just before Lafayette's death he was invited with the American minister to dine at the house of Marbois, who was the French secretary of legation to the American colonies during the Revolution. When dinner was announced, the company were shown into a room which contrasted strangely with the elegance of the other apartments.

A low boarded, painted ceiling, with large beams, a single small, uncurtained window, with numerous small doors, as well as the general style of the whole, gave at first the idea of the kitchen or largest room of a Dutch or Belgian farmhouse.

On a rough table was a repast, which consisted of a large dish of meat, uncouth looking pastry and wine in decanters and bottles, accompanied by glass and silver mugs, such as indicated other habits and tastes than those of modern Paris.

"Do you know where you are?" said the host to Lafayette.

He paused for a few moments—he had seen something like this before, but when and where?

"Ah, the seven doors and one window! And the silver camp goblets, such as the marshals of France used in my youth!" exclaimed Lafayette. "We are at Washington's headquarters on the Hudson 50 years ago!"—Youth's Companion.

Gentlemen:—I am truly thankful for good results I have obtained from the use of your Paine's Celery Compound. For a long time I have been a sufferer from general debility and indigestion and have made use of many medicines, but none have given me the grand results as far as improved health is concerned, as has your wonderful Paine's Celery Compound. PROOF STILL LACKING.

The confirmation of the mass of nebulous charges scattered broadcast over the world by aliens abroad and oppositionists at home is tantalizingly tardy in materializing. In the meantime those papers and men who are busy trying to injure their country that they may embarrass the Government, should occasionally pause to realize the harm they are doing to the fair name of the Dominion. The Government papers, headed by the Globe, have from the beginning very properly declared that investigation, thorough, practical and complete, should be had. The Government itself, represented here by the Minister of the Interior, and in the Yukon by Major Walsh, in the first place, and now by Commissioner Ogilvie, has from the time of the first intimation of alleged wrong doing striven to get at the facts. The net results of every request for definite information so far, has been nil. If the aforesaid papers and men who are so very anxious for the discovery of the truth would come to the assistance of the Government and submit their charges in the manner in which they would proceed in any other imaginable case under the sun, they would do more in one day to accomplish their ostensible desire than they have in all the months of indefatigable insinuation and reckless generalities.

The Umbrella Conscience.

"You may bank on a guilty conscience almost every time when an umbrella is in question," said a New Orleans drummer. "You see this one? Well, it came into my possession quite recently by what they call the 'right of conquest' in a protocol. I was caught out in the rain after lunch and wondering what the duce I would do when I noticed a chap under an awning trying to raise an umbrella. It was clear he didn't understand the fastening, and as the umbrella itself was not new the circumstantial evidence against him was conclusive.

"So I walked up and said firmly, 'That's my umbrella, sir.' At the same time I took it out of his hand. He wilted at once, stammered something about a mistake and sneaked off, while I walked away proudly, sheltered from a very moist shower. That's what nerve will do. Wonder, by the way, whose it really is."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

A Pair of Bulls.

A very quaint reason, says a writer in the London Telegraph, was advanced by a domestic servant for thinking that the place she was in was in every way desirable. "Are yez in a good place, Mary?" asked one of her friends. "Oh, a mighty foine place entirely," she replied. "Shure, my mistress is so rich that all her flannel petticoats is made of silk!" "Look at that now!" exclaimed the other in amazement.

Here is a bull from the nursery: "That's a terrible noise in the nursery, Molly," said the mistress. "What's the matter? Can't you keep the baby quiet?" "Shure, ma'am," replied Molly, "I can't keep him quiet unless I let him make a noise."

Indorsing the Asp.

In Marmontel's tragedy of Cleopatra, represented in the Theatre Francais, when the Egyptian queen was about ready to commit suicide she held in her hands a mechanical asp of cunning workmanship devised by Vaucanson, the most ingenious mechanician of his time.

This venomous reptile reared its head and before plunging its apparent fangs into the arm of the actress gave a shrill hiss.

A spectator hereupon arose and left the house, with the simple but expressive remark, "I am of the same opinion as the asp."—Pearson's Weekly.

A Canadian Medicine.

WHICH HAS MADE A WONDERFUL REPUTATION THROUGHOUT THE WORLD.

Every Cure Published is Investigated by a Responsible Newspaper—The Advertiser has Looked into and gives Below the Particulars of One of These Cures.

From The Advertiser, Hartland, N. B.

The Advertiser has come across still another instance of the remarkable curative powers of the famous Canadian remedy, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale people. Mr. Wm. Tedlie, of Lower Brighton, a prominent lumberman and farmer, came very near being a cripple from rheumatism, the dread disease so prevalent along the St. John river. Mr. Tedlie is now 65 years of age. Five years ago he was taken with the first symptoms of rheumatism—over exposure, the stream drives and the general hard life of the lumberman paved the way for the lodgment of the excruciating disease. The symptoms first manifest were pains through the legs, arms and hands. Gradually conditions grew worse. At intervals there would be an abatement of the malady, but for months each year he was very nearly helpless. The pain was so agonizing that sleep was out of the question, and to work was impossible. The afflicted man had so often read of the efficacy of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in cases similar to his own that he resolved to try them. He says, however, that he was not hopeful of receiving much benefit, as he had tried many medicines without any good result following. He began the use of the pills and by the time a couple of boxes were used he found they were helping him. Thus encouraged he continued the use of the medicine and gradually the pains and soreness left him, he was able to sleep soundly, and enjoyed an excellent appetite. In fact after using Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for less than two months Mr. Tedlie says he found himself in the best of health. He is now a warm friend of this great medicine and urges similar sufferers not to experiment with other medicines but at once begin the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

Rheumatism, sciatica, neuralgia, partial paralysis, locomotor ataxia, nervous headache, nervous prostration, and diseases depending upon humors in the blood, such as scrofula, chronic erysipelas, etc., all disappear before a fair treatment with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. They give a healthy glow to pale and sallow complexions and build and renew the entire system. Sold by all dealers or sent post paid at 50 cts. a box or six boxes for $2.50 by addressing the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville Ont. Do not be persuaded to take some substitute.

Your Neighbor's Umbrella.

What ought to be done, ought to be done. He who borrows an umbrella ought to return it because it is borrowed. Umbrellas are for rainy days, and the borrower ought to be willing to carry an umbrella on a fair day in order to get it returned to its owner in time for him to use it on the next rainy day. So long as he is in debt and could pay the debt by dispensing with a little vanity or by a little exertion and yet does not discharge his debt he is not strictly honorable. The umbrella is not "only an umbrella," it is a point in morals. Many a man has started upward or downward in life from the day he struck an attitude toward his neighbor's umbrella.—Sunday School Times.

A PRETTY SCHOOL DRESS.

New Creations From Discarded Materials.

In every young girl there is a natural and inherent desire to look pretty and attractive, and nothing gives greater delight to the ordinary school miss than an occasional new dress.

Before the advent of Diamond Dyes the large majority of our school girls had to content themselves with two dresses a year—one each for summer and winter. Now, with the magical virtues of Diamond Dyes, mothers in even very moderate circumstances are enabled to send their girls to school as neatly and stylishly dressed as the daughters of well-to-do families.

A little feminine tact and skill that all women possess, with the aid of a ten cent package of Diamond Dyes, will do wonders for our school girls.

Every mother has put aside one or more dresses too old and faded for her daughters. It is a mistake to imagine that these dresses are worthless. With a little simple work in coloring and remaking you can have really artistic effects and results.

Take one of the old dresses and try your skill. First remove all green spots and stains, then prepare your bath of Diamond Dye—the color most becoming to the miss who is to wear it—and dye according to the simple directions on the envelope, and you have a creation in new material, which, when made up, your daughter can wear with pride and satisfaction.

A new and pretty dress at a cost of from ten to twenty cents is always your reward when you make use of the Diamond Dyes.

BISMARCK STORIES.

THE READY WIT OF THE MAN OF BLOOD AND IRON.

A Cemetery That Would Not Agree With Him—Lessons In Politeness to Count Thun of Austria—A Startling Answer to an Indiscreet Question.

The late Prince Bismarck, although known as a man of blood and iron, was remarkable for his ready wit and his never failing alertness in any emergency. A few years before his death he was surprised by a delegation of peasants from his family estate, Schoenhausen. They had come to ask him to choose their village cemetery for his final resting place.

"It can't be," replied Bismarck calmly. "The conditions of your cemetery do not agree with my rheumatism, and I have no desire to bring my gout with me into the grave."

Naturally brave and often reckless in the face of danger, Bismarck shunned nothing when a life was to be saved. As a young lieutenant he risked his own life to save that of his drowning servant. He received the medal "for saving of human life," and he continued to wear it on all ceremonious occasions until he withdrew from public life. Once some high personage, proud of his titles and decorations, noticed the insignificant little medal on the breast of Bismarck and asked sneeringly, "What does that thing mean?"

"Not much," said Bismarck, "only that I am in the habit of saving a life now and then."

He was a man of the world whenever he wanted to be so and an excellent talker. These qualities surprised no one more than the empress of France, who, like most of her countrywomen, was inclined to conceive Bismarck as a rude, cold blooded, clumsy brute of the old uncivilized Teutons, who led a primitive life in the virgin forests of Germany, dividing their hostile attentions between boars, bears and Romans. It was she who said of him, "Mais il est plus causeur qu'un Français!"

While Austria remained the head of the Federation of German States and Bismarck attended the federal council at Frankfurt as the representative of Prussia he had many dealings and as many semi-hostile encounters with the Austrian president of the council, Count Thun, whom he viewed with unlimited disgust. Once he called on Thun, who received him in his shirt sleeves. Bismarck proceeded to pull off his own coat without a moment's hesitation, saying, "Indeed, count, it is very hot in your room!"

The count jumped from his chair and hastened to put on his coat, at the same time pouring out apologies. On the occasion of another visit Thun was seated at his writing desk smoking and with an open box of cigars in front of him. He asked Bismarck to wait for a few moments, but offered him nothing to smoke. Bismarck, who was an enthusiastic devotee of the weed, suffered in silence for a few moments and then walked up to the desk and deliberately picked out a cigar under the nose of the startled count, and once more that gentleman had to apologize.

Bismarck's fondness for tobacco lasted till his death in spite of all protests from his physician. All the faithful Dr. Schweninger could do was to have the strong cigars of earlier years supplanted by long stemmed, well cleaned pipes. On the day before his death Bismarck smoked five of these.

"He lies like an official news bureau," exclaimed Bismarck once in the Prussian diet.

Bismarck was always disliked by the diplomatists of the old school, whose tricks and conceits he despised. He confounded their clever plans time and again by an almost overbearing use of the truth. In the spring of 1866, when the war against Austria was nothing but a possibility, Bismarck, who was then president of the Prussian cabinet, attended a dinner given by the minister of Saxony. The Countess Hohenhausen, who sat by his side, was inconsiderate enough to ask, "Is it true that your excellency intends to go to war with Austria?"

"Certainly, my dear countess," replied Bismarck in his blandest manner. "I have thought of nothing else since I entered the cabinet. Our guns are ready, and you will soon find that they are superior to the Austrian artillery."

"But, then, you must give me some friendly advice," said the countess. "I occasion he was pensioned by his govern-

Governor Desha of Kentucky more than he disappeared. That son is now the most

FRANKLIN'S MORAL CODE.

Benjamin Franklin formulated this moral code, which he kept as a guide to all his acts:

Temperance—Eat not to fullness; drink not to elevation.

Silence—Speak not but what may benefit others or yourself; avoid trifling conversations.

Order—Let all your things have their places; let each part of your business have its time.

Resolution—Resolve to perform what you ought; perform without fail what you resolve.

Frugality—Make no expense, but do good to others as yourself—that is, waste nothing.

Industry—Lose no time; be always employed in something useful, but avoid all unnecessary actions.

Sincerity—Use no hurtful deceit; think innocently and justly, and if you speak speak accordingly.

Justice—Wrong no one by doing injuries or omitting the benefits that are your duty.

Moderation—Avoid extremes; forbear resenting injuries.

Cleanliness—Suffer no uncleanness in body, clothes or habitation.

Tranquillity—Be not disturbed about trifles or at accidents common or unavoidable.

Humility—Imitate Jesus Christ.

have two castles, one in Bohemia and one near Telpso. Which one will be the safest to go to?

"If you take my advice," answered Bismarck, "you will not go to Bohemia. Your castle is located in the very vicinity where we intend to beat the Austrians Go to Saxony, and you will be perfectly safe."

The countess made her indiscretion complete by telling every one of this remarkable conversation. The world was startled, and demands for an explanation came from all quarters.

"Pooh!" smiled Bismarck, with a shrug of his shoulders. "Do you pay attention to an ironical answer prompted by an indiscreet question?"

Wolff's Telegraph bureau was honored with Bismarck's attention on account of some alleged irregularities. The chancellor summoned one of the government officers, who promptly asserted that he did not know a thing about the whole matter.

"You had better make a thorough investigation and give me a detailed report," said Bismarck. "But there is no special hurry. If I have the report by tomorrow at noon, that will be time enough."

Good living was one of Bismarck's weak points, and the first Countess Bismarck said sometimes that the chef de cuisine was the only one who could govern her Iron Chancellor. Certain it is that this magnate, Herr Mueller, could take liberties which would have proved dangerous to other persons. He had sent word twice on one occasion that dinner was ready.

"Not hungry yet. Wait another half hour," was the reply that came from the chancellor.

The third message received from the kitchen magnate admitted of no appeal:

"His excellency will have to eat now, whether he is hungry or not, for I, the premier of the kitchen, cannot keep the dishes any longer."

The premier of Prussia submitted without demurring and went to dinner at once.—Exchange.

Parson and Bunker.

On the St. Andrews golf course there is a bunker known as "hell," says Scottish Life and Humor. A parson who was playing got into this bunker one day and could not get out of it. In the midst of his efforts a telegram arrived for him, and a returning caddy was asked if he had seen him. "Oo, aye," was the reply; "I've just left him down in hell, damnin an swearin maist awfu'!"

FISH AS FOOD.

There Is No Evidence That It Supplies Phosphorus to the Brain.

Why is fish called a brain diet? Does it really nourish the brain more than other articles of food? What kinds of fish are best in this respect, and does the method of cooking make any difference—that is, is boiled or fried fish better?

A chemical examination of fish shows that it contains a considerable amount of phosphorus. A chemical examination of the human brain shows that it also contains a considerable amount of phosphorus. From this fact the chemist jumps to the conclusion that fish must be especially good as a brain food, but there is not the slightest experimental evidence to support this theory. On the other hand, it is a well attested fact that those communities and tribes of men which subsist most largely upon fish are the lowest in the scale of human development. The Tierra del Fuegos live almost exclusively on raw fish and are perhaps the lowest of all human beings. A young student in a western college once wrote to Artemus Ward asking how much fish he thought he should eat to supply his daily mental needs. The wit replied that he thought a small whale would be about suited to his requirements.

Fish, like other forms of flesh, are most digestible eaten raw, but as few palates could tolerate the flavor of raw fish it may be suggested that broiling or boiling is the next best method of preparation. Fried fish, like fried beef, is almost wholly indigestible, as the fat renders the lean or albuminous portion of the fish almost wholly incapable of digestion by the gastric juice.—Voice.

The Mile In Many Countries.

The English mile, used also in this country, measures 1,760 yards, or 5,280 feet. But the mile of foreign countries varies almost as much as the language, so that traveling a mile is one thing either shorter or longer, in other countries. The French system of the "kilometer," or 1,000 meters, is also used in Belgium and Holland. To cyclists and others traveling in those countries the kilometer—equal to 1,094 yards—is used as a mile measure. The Spanish mile is 1,522 yards, and the Russian only 1,067 yards. But the Chinese have the easiest time of all in making a mile record, their mile being only 609 yards. In Norway and Sweden the mile is 11,690 yards, and in Germany it equals three English miles. English Farmers Fifty Years Ago.

Gigs would be got ready soon after the early dinner, arrival being timed for 3 or 4 o'clock. The gentlemen would take a farming survey, the ladies chat over needlework, at 5 o'clock tea, if tea it could be called, awaiting hosts and guests. The first course of this elaborate repast consisted of home cured ham, that incomparable Suffolk ham pickled in spice, and harvest beer—harvest beer, itself clear as sherry and twice as strong—was drunk with this dish. Next came the strongest of tea and the richest of cream with rusks, also a Suffolk specialty, and cakes equally unrivaled. The tea things removed, hot water and spirit decanter would be brought out, pipes smoked, thereby apparently digestion being restored. Seldom did any one seem the worse for such prolonged eating and drinking.—"Reminiscences of Bentham Edwards."

TWO SHARK STORIES.

Horrible Encounters Under the Water With Man Eating Monsters.

"One of the most horrible predicaments a diver was ever placed in," said Mr. Sully, the famous Newport diver, "must have been that of one of whom I once heard who had to investigate a wreck that had carried to the bottom with her a number of cattle. When he blew off the hatches, the bodies floated up, and with a rush a school of hungry sharks attacked them. They were all around the diver, fighting and struggling, and he was in mortal terror lest his air pipe should be bitten in two in the midst of the fearful struggle that was going on. At length, unable to bear the suspense any longer, he signaled to be drawn up, notwithstanding that he would have to pass through the thick of the fierce monsters. In his passage to the surface he brushed close past the sharks, and one of them made a vicious grab at him. It missed his arm, but caught his fingers, and his hand was badly mangled. Perhaps, however, he was glad to get off as cheaply as he did."

"An American diver once told me a blood curdling story of a fight with a shark waged by a man named Hallett. The latter, it is said, was working in one of the old fashioned 'bells, and while he was being lowered one day he saw below him a black object. In a second or two he recognized that it was a shark, and, to his horror, the bell trapped the monster, so that man and shark were rubbing against each other in the closest possible proximity. The shark grew alarmed, and in swinging viciously around knocked Hallett from his seat. The diver had in his hand a small sharp saw, and, fearing that the shark would make short work of him, he seized one of its fins and plunged his saw deep into its body."

"Then a terrible struggle began. In the confined space the shark could not get at the diver without shaking off the hold that the latter had got, and the latter, seeing that his only hope was to retain his hold, clung on desperately, all the time driving his saw time after time into the body of the maddened sea tiger. Hallett had contrived to make a signal, and just as his senses were leaving him he felt himself rising. When the bell was drawn out of the water, man and shark rolled out in a blood stained heap, but the man had conquered. When he came to his senses, he found that a torn and wounded leg was all the injury he had received in the awful encounter, but the shark was dead."—Chums.

The Troy Times tells of a little girl who had been naughty. When bedtime came her mother said to her, "Now, Mabel, when you say your prayers, be sure to ask God to help you not to be a naughty little girl." "And now, O God, please keep Mabel from being a naughty little girl." There was a pause, then she concluded, "Nevertheless thy will, not mine, be done!"

FIFTY YEARS OLD

Why let your neighbors know it?

And why give them a chance to guess you are even five or ten years more?

Better give them good reasons for guessing the other way. It is very easy; for nothing tells of age so quickly as gray hair.

Ayer's Hair Vigor

is a youth-renewer.

It hides the age under a luxuriant growth of hair the color of youth.

It never fails to restore color to gray hair. It will stop the hair from coming out also.

It feeds the hair bulbs. Thin hair becomes thick hair, and short hair becomes long hair.

It cleanses the scalp; removes all dandruff, and prevents its formation.

We have a book on the Hair which we will gladly send you.

If you do not obtain all the benefits you expect from the use of the Vigor, write the doctor about it. Probably there is some difficulty with your general system which may be easily removed. Address, Dr. J. C. Ayer, Lowell, Mass.

Accordingly we set to work perfecting all the ins and outs of our plan, and or-war might have patrolled that seemingly barren coast for weeks on end and still have been unaware of the harbor that lay concealed behind.

"Now you will want to rest, I know," she said. "I think you will find your old cabin prepared for you."

"And you?"

"I am going below too. Look! The coast is fast disappearing from our sight. There it goes beneath the horizon. Now will you wish our enterprise good luck?"

"Good luck!" I said, with a little squeeze of her hand.

"Thank you and may God bless you!" she answered softly, and immediately vanished down the companion ladder.

CHAPTER VIII

A QUEER SURPRISE.

Within a week of our leaving the island behind us, as narrated in the previous chapter, we had brought the Madura coast well abeam and were dodging along it waiting for darkness to fall in order to get into Probolinggo harbor. Here it was arranged I should leave the yacht and travel by the Nederlands-India line of steamers to Batavia. A vessel of this line, so we had discovered, called at Probolinggo about the end of each month, and for this reason our arrival was timed for the afternoon of the day of her departure.

Shortly before 3 o'clock we brought up at the anchorage about a mile from the shore. It was a lovely afternoon, and I could see that the steamer which was to carry me on was already preparing for her departure. The boat was alongside, my traps were safely stowed in her, and nothing remained but to bid Alie goodby. As soon as this was accomplished I went down the gangway, took my seat in the stern, and we pushed off. Ten minutes later I was on board the steamer Van Tromp, had paid my passage money, secured my berth and was waiting to see what the next item of the programme would be.

From the deck of the Dutch vessel, as she swept by us under full sail, her course set for Batavia, the Lone Star looked as pretty a craft as any man could wish to see. I noticed, however, that during the three months she had been in her own harbor her color and indeed her whole appearance had been entirely changed. When first I had made her acquaintance, she was white as the driven snow; now she was a peculiar shade of red. Her bows seemed bluffer than when I had seen her last. Indeed from the present shape and construction of her masts and gear it would have been extremely difficult to tell her for the same vessel.

At 6 o'clock and in the eye of a glorious sunset we got up our pressure and steamed out to sea. Of that voyage there is little to tell. The Van Tromp was a clumsy old tub of an almost obsolete pattern, and by the time we reached Tanjung Priok, the seaport of Batavia is called, I had had about enough of her.

Once there, I repacked my bag and stepped on to the wharf, resolved to take the first train to the city. Arriving there, I drove direct to the hotel whose name Alie had given me and booked my room.

Batavia is a pretty place, and at the time of our visit it was looking its best. So far I had seen nothing of Alie, and I did not like to make inquiries concerning her lest by so doing I might excite suspicion. To while away the time till dinner I lit a cigar and, seating myself in the long veranda that surrounded the house, read my book, keeping a watchful eye on the folk about me all the time.

Shortly before 5 o'clock I noticed that the Dutch ladies in my neighborhood ordered afternoon tea and partook of it in the veranda. Not to be outdone, I followed their example. But just as I was about to pour myself out a cup an interruption occurred which presently assumed annoying proportions.

The table, on which my Malay boy had placed the tray, stood in the full glare of the afternoon sun, and this be-

"I reckon, before we begin, we'd better do a little introducing, don't you? This lady" (she pointed to her companion) "is my very kind friend Mrs. Beecher of Boston, with whom I am traveling. You've probably heard of Beecher's patent double action sofa springs, I reckon? I am Kate Sanderson of New York, only daughter of Millionaire Sanderson of Wall street, whom I guess you've heard all about too. So you see we're both of the United States of America, and very much at your service."

"I am very glad to have met you," I answered. "My name is De Normanville, and I hail from London."

"Not Dr. De Normanville of Cavendish square surely?"

"Yes, the same. Cavendish square was my London address two years ago. But how do you come to know it?"

"Well, now, if that isn't real extraordinary! I thought I recognized you directly I set eyes on you. But it's mighty plain you don't remember me. That's not much of a compliment any way you look at it, is it, Mrs. Beecher?"

The elder declined to commit herself, so Miss Sanderson once more turned to me.

"Just think now, Dr. De Normanville," she said. "Look at me well and try to remember where we have met before."

I looked and looked, but for the life of me I could not recall her face, and yet somehow it seemed strangely familiar to me. All the time I was watching her she sat gazing at me with an amused smile upon her face, and when she saw that it was useless my cudgeling my brains any more gave another little silvery laugh and said:

"Do you remember just three years ago being called into the Langham hotel to attend a young American lady who had a fish bone stuck in her throat?"

"I remember the circumstance perfectly," I answered, "but that young lady was only one or two and twenty."

"You think, then, I look older than that? Well, I reckon you are really not very complimentary. But you must remember that that was three years ago, and I was only a girl then. When once soon, however, as the meal was over I rose, and before walking out looked about me. Some of the residents were still dining, and at the end of the middle table, farthest from me, were, without doubt, the two ladies whom I had seen arrive. At the distance I was from them it was quite impossible to tell who they were, but from the poise of her head and the shape of her beautiful arms and shoulders I felt convinced that the taller of the two was the woman I loved and whom I had all the afternoon been so anxiously expecting.

Seeing, however, that it was just possible I might be mistaken and remembering the instruction Alie had given me to let our meeting appear accidental, I could not walk down the length of the room and accost her, so I betook myself into the marble portico and waited for them to come out. But as it happened Miss Sanderson and her friend were the first to emerge, and the voluble young American took me by storm at once. From what she told me I gathered two things—first, that hitherto she had found her evenings dull and, second, that on this particular occasion there was to be an open air concert on the king's plain, distant about a mile from the hotel. She and her friend had intended going, if they could find an escort, and there and then she asked me if I would officiate in that capacity. I did not know what to say. They were women, and I could not be rude, and, moreover, as they had evidently set their hearts upon going and I was not positively certain that Alie had arrived I felt I had no right to decline the honor of escorting them. Accordingly I assented and went across the garden to get my hat. Five minutes later they met me at the gates, and we strolled down the road together toward the plain.

There are few prettier places in the world than Batavia, and I have met with few handsomer girls than the distinguished looking American by my side, but for all that I was not contented with my lot. I wanted to be back in the veranda at the hotel watching for Alie.

cern. It was an uncanny hour to embark, and my feelings were quite in keeping with the situation. I was saying goodbye to a place for which I had developed a sincere affection, and I was going out into the world again to do a deed which might end in cutting me off from my profession, my former associates, and even my one remaining relative. These thoughts sat heavily upon me as I mounted the ladder, but when on reaching the deck Alie turned and took my hand and gave me a welcome back to the yacht they were dispelled for good and all.

We passed through and out into the sea. By the time we reached open water daylight had increased to such an extent that when we were a mile out objects ashore could be quite plainly distinguished.

"Look astern," said Alie, who stood by my side upon the bridge, "and tell me if you can discover the entrance to the harbor."

I did so, but though I looked and looked and even brought a glass to bear upon the cliffs I could see no break in the line through which a vessel of any size might pass.

"No," I said at last; "I must confess I cannot see it."

"Now you will understand," she said, smiling at my bewilderment, "the meaning of those great doors. On the seaward side they are painted to resemble the cliffs. Could any one wish for a better disguise?"

I agreed that no one could, and indeed it was most wonderful. A man-

st. That's so, I reckon. Well, now that was, to be sure, wasn't it? Lor,

"It was a very nasty scratch, if I remember rightly," I answered, glad to have at last discovered who this talka-tive creature was and where I had seen
 her face before.

"Are you remaining very long in Java, Mrs. Beecher?" I asked the elder lady, feeling that so far she had been rather neglected.

"No, I think not," she answered
 thoughtfully. "We are trying to make up our minds whether to take a British India steamer home from here or to go up
 to Singapore and intercept a Peninsular and Oriental there. Miss Sanderson has taken a great fancy to the east, and I must confess I am very loath to leave it."

"You are quite right," I said. "I can fully sympathize with your feelings. I am sadly reluctant to go back to foggy old England myself after my trip out
 here."

"And do you intend going back very soon?" asked Miss Sanderson, who had been smoothing out her gloves upon her knee.

"Within the next month or so," I answered, with a sigh. "My business
 in the east is at an end, and I have no
 excuse for staying longer."

From this point the talk drifted on to general topics, and when tea was finished I seized the first opportunity that
 presented itself, and making an excuse withdrew. Just as I stepped from the veranda one of the small native dosados carts entered the grounds and drew up near the end of my corridor. Two ladies descended from it, and having paid the driver entered their rooms.

One was tall and the other rather short-
 er. At last I felt convinced Alie had arrived.

As they disappeared the gong warned us to prepare for dinner, but heedless of my costume I seated myself outside my door and waited. Though I remained there for some time, however,
 they did not emerge again, and at last I
 was compelled to go in and make myself presentable without having seen
 them.

At dinner, which was served in the palatial marble dining saloon standing in the center of the gardens, I discover-laid at a long table at the farther end, exactly opposite those occupied by the

"It was a very nasty scratch, if I remember rightly," I answered, glad to
 have at last discovered who this talka-
 tive creature was and where I had seen
 her face before.

"Are you remaining very long in Java, Mrs. Beecher?" I asked the elder lady, feeling that so far she had been
 rather neglected.

"No, I think not," she answered
 thoughtfully. "We are trying to make up our minds whether to take a British India steamer home from here or to go up
 to Singapore and intercept a Peninsular
 and Oriental there. Miss Sanderson has taken a great fancy to the east, and I
 must confess I am very loath to leave

crowd of people were promenading to the strains of a military band. At any other time the music would have been inspiring, but in the humor I was in,
 the gayest marches sounded like funeral dirges. For over an hour we continued to promenade, until I began really to think that I should have to ask my friends to accompany me home or remain where they were without me. But at last the concert "came to an end, and we once more turned our faces in the direction of our hotel.

"You have been very quiet this evening," said Miss Sanderson to me as we left the turf and stepped on to the road again.

"I hope my being so has not spoilt your enjoyment," I said, trying to beg the question.

"Oh, dear, no!" Then as if something had suddenly struck her: "Do you expect to see any one in Batavia? I have noticed that you scan every lady we pass as if you were on the lookout for an acquaintance."

"I did expect to see some one, I must confess," I answered. "You have sharp eyes, Miss Sanderson."

"They have been trained in a sharp school," was her brief reply.

By this time we were within five minutes' walk of home and in the act of crossing one of the numerous bridges that in Dutch fashion grace Batavia's streets. We paused for a few moments and leaned over the parapet to look down at the star spangled water oozing its silent way toward the sea. It was all very quiet, and as far as we could see we had the street to ourselves. Suddenly Miss Sanderson dropped her American accent and said in quite a different voice:

"Dr. De Normanville, this has gone far enough. Do you know me now?"

It was Alie.

To say that I was taken by surprise would not be to express my condition at all. I was simply overwhelmed with astonishment, and for some seconds could only stand and stare at her in complete amazement. Her disguise was so perfect, her American accent so real, her acting had been so wonderfully main-

"You are quite right," I said. "I can

 here."

"And do you intend going back very soon?" asked Miss Sanderson, who had been smoothing out her gloves upon her
 knee.

"Within the next month or so," I
 answered, with a sigh. "My business
 in the east is at an end, and I have no
 excuse for staying longer."

From this point the talk drifted on to
 general topics, and when tea was finished I seized the first opportunity that
 presented itself, and making an excuse withdrew. Just as I stepped from the veranda one of the small native dos-
 ados carts entered the grounds and drew
 up near the end of my corridor. Two ladies descended from it, and having
 paid the driver entered their rooms.

One was tall and the other rather short-
 er. At last I felt convinced Alie had arrived.

As they disappeared the gong warn-
 ed us to prepare for dinner, but heed-
 less of my costume I seated myself outside my door and waited. Though I remained there for some time, however,
 they did not emerge again, and at last I
 was compelled to go in and make myself presentable without having seen
 them.

At dinner, which was served in the ment—who very nearly got into serious trouble. The charge against him was that by his orders two native women had been flogged to death. By some means he managed to disprove it and to escape punishment, but the feeling against him was so bitter that it was thought advisable to transfer him elsewhere. You would have imagined that that lesson would have been enough for him. Not a bit. On the new island he began his reign of tyranny again, and once more a death occurred. This time, however, the victim was a man. The authorities at home were immediately appealed to, with the result that an inquiry was held, and his retention on that island was also considered injudicious. He was removed from his high estate. That was all. He had murdered, I repent it, deliberately murdered, three people—in fact, flogged the lives out of two women and one man, and the only sentence passed upon him was that he should be transferred elsewhere. It makes my blood boil to think of it."

"I can quite understand it."

"Yes. That was all. Nothing more was done. The man went free. The poor wretches were only natives, you must understand. And who cares about a few natives? No one. You may think I'm exaggerating, but I am not. Now it so happens that I have an agent living on that very island whom I can perfectly trust. He was a witness on the inquiry commission. He saw the flogging in question, and in due course he reported the facts to me. I must also tell you that that man boasted publicly that if he caught me he would—but there, I dare not tell you what he said he would do. Now his friends have used their influence, and he has been appointed to a post in one of the treaty ports of China. I hear he is a passenger on the mailboat touching at Singapore next week."

"And what do you intend to do?"

"It is my intention, if possible, to catch him, to punish him as he deserves, and by so doing to teach him a lesson he will remember all his life."

CHAPTER IX.

HOW WE SUCCEEDED IN OUR ENTERPRISE.

On arrival at Singapore we took rickshaws and drove direct from the wharf to the Mandalay Hotel, a palatial white building of two stories, boasting vivid green shutters on every window and broad, luxurious verandas on every floor. I was the first to reach it, and, remembering my position of casual acquaintance, I booked a room for myself, leaving Miss Sanderson and her companion to follow my example when they should arrive.

It was then late in the afternoon, and by the time we had thoroughly settled in night had fallen and the preliminary dressing gong had sounded for dinner. So far I had seen nothing of the person of whom we were in search, but I did not doubt that at the evening meal I should become acquainted with his whereabouts, even if I did not actually meet the man himself.

The dining room at the Mandalay was at the rear of the hotel and lay away a short distance from the main entrance.

The wolf of starvation howls at the thousands of men who are well to do and surrounded by plenty. Ill-health, in the majority of cases, is starvation, pure and simple. It means that body, brain, nerve, bone and sinew are improperly or insufficiently nourished. Improper, insufficient nourishment is starvation.

When a man's head aches it is because the tissues of the brain do not receive sufficient nourishment from the blood, or receive impure and unhealthy nourishment. When a man gets nervous and sleepless, it means that the blood is not properly nourishing the nerves. When his skin breaks out with blotches and pimples and eruptions, it means that the skin is being fed upon the impurities of the blood. Almost every known disease is primarily due to improper nourishment through the blood, which is the life-stream. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is the greatest of all blood makers and purifiers. It gives edge to the appetite, corrects all disorders of the digestion, makes the assimilation of the life-giving elements of the food perfect, invigorates the liver, promotes secretion and excretion, and vitalizes the whole body. It makes firm, muscular flesh, but does not make corpulent people more corpulent. It cures 98 per cent. of all cases of lingering coughs, bronchial, throat and kindred affections, which, if neglected, lead up to consumption. It is the best of all nerve tonics and restoratives. Kept by all medicine dealers.

"I was taken ill in February, 1892, with headache and pain in my back," writes H. G. Galt, Esq., of 314 South J Street, Tacoma, Wash. "I called in a doctor and he came three times. He said I was bilious but I kept getting worse. I took a cough so that I could not sleep, only by being propped up in bed. My lungs hurt me, and I got so poor that I was just skin and bone. I thought I was going to die. I used two bottles of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and it made me sound and well. It saved my life."

No remedy relieves constipation so quickly and effectively as Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. They never gripe.

seems, however, to travel in very good style and evidently denies herself nothing. But you spoke of the Beautiful White Devil. I am most interested in what I have heard of that personage. Are you well up in the subject?"

"How should I be?" he answered, as I thought, a little quickly. "Of course I know what every other man in the east knows, but no more. Thank goodness she has never done me the honor of abducting me as she did the sultan of Surabaya and those other Johnnies. But with regard to Miss Sanderson, I wonder if I should be considered impertinent if I asked you to give me the pleasure of an introduction."

"Of course I did not tell him that it was the very thing of all others that I desired to do, but at the same time I could hardly conceal my exultation. I had, however, to keep my delight to myself for fear lest he should suspect, so I relit my cigar, which had gone out, and then said, with as much carelessness as I could assume:

"I don't know altogether whether I'm sufficiently intimate with her to take the liberty of introducing you, but, as I said just now, she seems a jolly sort of girl and not inclined to be standoffish, so if ever I get an opportunity I don't mind risking it. Now, I think, if you'll excuse me, I'll say good night. That wretched old pocket of a steamer rolled up the way up from Tanjong Priok that I have hardly had a wink of sleep these three nights past."

"Good night and thank you very much for your company. Glad to have met you, I'm sure."

Next morning, as soon as breakfast was over, I went down into the town, shopping. When I returned about 11 o'clock, I discovered Alie and her chapman sitting in the veranda, waiting for a dainty rickshaw which one of the hotel boys had gone out to procure. Ebbington was seated in a chair near by, and evidently seemed to consider this a good opportunity for effecting the introduction he had proposed the night before. I entered into conversation with him for a few moments, and then, crossing the veranda, asked the ladies in which direction they contemplated gained, that I never for an instant suspected the trick she had been playing upon me.

"You, Alie!" I cried when at last I found my voice. "Is it possible that Miss Sanderson has been a myth all the time?"

"Not only quite possible, but a fact," she answered, with a laugh. "Yes, I am Alie, and no more Miss Sanderson of New York than you are. Do me the justice to remember I warned you I was good at disguising myself. My reason for not revealing my identity to you before was that I wanted thoroughly to test the value of the part I was playing, and since you, who know me so well, did not recognize me I am inclined to believe nobody else will."

"It is simply marvelous. If you had not declared yourself, I should never have known you. And your companion is therefore not Mrs. Beecher, whose husband's patent double action sofa springs are so justly famous, any more than you are Miss Sanderson?"

"No, both the husband and the sofa springs are creations of my own imagination."

"But the incident you recalled to my memory—the bone in your throat that I extracted at the Langham—how do you account for that?"

"Easily. One day in your surgery at the settlement you casually mentioned having extracted a fish bone from a young American lady's throat at that hotel. I thought it unlikely, as it was the only time you ever saw her, that you would remember her name or face, so I assumed that character in order to try the effect of my disguise upon you."

"You are a wonderful actress. You would make your fortune on the stage."

"Do you think so? What a sensation it would cause in the east! But now to business! As we may not have another opportunity, let us see that our plans coincide. By the way, the French boat leaves tomorrow afternoon for Singapore. You have booked your passage of course?"

I nodded assent, and she continued: "You must board her alone. We shall join just before she sails. When we get to Singapore, we must drive separately to the Mandalay hotel and figure there in the light of casual traveling acquaintances. Before you have been in the place half a day you will probably have been introduced to Mr. Ebbington, the man we want. He will see you talking to me, and by hook or crook you must introduce him to me. Whatever you do, don't forget, however, that my name is Sanderson. Having done this, leave the rest to me. Do you think you thoroughly understand?"

"Thoroughly."
"That's right. Now let us be getting home. Tomorrow we must be early astir."

We continued our walk and in five minutes had bade each other good night in the hotel garden and separated.

By sundown next day we were on board the Messageries Maritimes company's boat, steaming out of Tanjong Priok harbor, bound for Singapore. I joined the steamer some time before her advertised sailing hour, but it was close upon the time of her departure when Alie and her companion made their appearance.

In my capacity of casual acquaintance I raised my hat to them as they came up the gangway, but did not do more. They went below, while I staid on deck, watching the business of getting under way.

Just as the last sign of the coast line disappeared beneath the waves someone came up and stood beside me. On looking round I discovered that it was Alie.

"So you managed to get on board safely," she said after the usual polite preliminaries had been gone through. "Our enterprise has now fairly started, and if we have ordinary luck we ought to be able to carry it through successfully."

"Let us hope that we shall have that luck then," I answered. "But I confess I tremble when I think of the risk you are running in appearing in a place like Singapore, where you have so many enemies."

"Even disguised as Miss Sanderson, the American heiress? No, you cannot mean it. If you think that, what will you say to another plot I am hatching?"

"Another? Good gracious! And what is this one to be?"

"Listen and you shall learn. Three years ago, in a certain island of the south Pacific, there was a man—an official holding a high office under govern-upon a charmingly arranged garden. Immediately upon my entering a waiter came forward and conducted me to my place at a table near the window. On my left was seated a portly, red faced gentleman, who, I discovered later, was an English merchant of considerable standing in the place. The chair on my right was vacant, but before we had dismissed the first course it was taken by a man who, my instinct told me, was none other than Mr. Ebbington himself. Why I should have come to this conclusion I cannot explain, but that I did think so and that I was right in so thinking I discovered a minute or two later, when a question was addressed to him by an acquaintance on the other side of the table. I continued the course without betraying my excitement, and when my plate was removed sat back and casually took stock of him.

From Alie's account and some kind of preconceived notion as to what sort of appearance such a dastardly traitor should present I had expected to see a small, shifty eyed, villainous type of man, wearing on his face some token of his guilt. But in place of that I discovered a stout, well set up, not unhandsome man about 40 years of age. His complexion was somewhat florid; his eyes were of an uncertain hue, between gray and steely blue; he had a pronounced nose and a heavy, almost double chin. Indeed, had it not been for his hesitating mode of speech I should have been inclined to put him down for a military man.

During the progress of the meal I found an opportunity of doing him some small service, and on this meager introduction we fell into a desultory conversation, which embraced Singapore, the latest news from England and the prospects of a war between China and Japan. When dinner was over, I rose and followed him into the veranda, offered him a cigarette, which he accepted, and seated myself in a lounge chair beside him. We had not been smoking five minutes before my sweetheart and her companion passed close to where we sat, en route to their rooms. As she came opposite to me Alie stopped.

"Good evening, Dr. De Normanville," she said. "Isn't this hotel delightful?"

I rose and uttered an appropriate reply, at the same time noticing that Ebbington was taking thorough stock of her. Then after another commonplace or two she bowed and passed on her way. I resumed my seat, and for nearly a minute we smoked in silence. Then my companion, who had evidently been carefully thinking his speech out, said with that peculiarly diffident utterance which, as I have said, was habitual to him:

"You'll excuse what I am going to say, I hope, but a friend and I were having a little discussion before dinner. The proprietor tells me Miss Sanderson, the American heiress, is staying in the house. I do not wish to be impertinent, but might I ask if the lady to whom you have just been speaking is Miss Sanderson?"

"Yes, she is Miss Sanderson," I replied. "You do not know her, then?"

"Never saw her before in my life," was his reply. "Pieces of good fortune like that don't often occur in Singapore. If they did, few of us would be here very long. I can assure you. But perhaps I am talking in too familiar a strain about your friend? If so, you must forgive me."

"Indeed, no!" I answered. "Don't trouble yourself on that score. I traveled up with them from Batavia in the French boat that arrived this afternoon. From what little I have seen of her she seems very pleasant and, as you have observed, is evidently inclined to be friendly."

"There is no doubt about the money, I suppose!" he continued. "Since Vesey of Hongkong was so completely taken in by the Beautiful White Devil we have been a little skeptical on the subject of heiresses down this way."

"On that point I'm afraid I cannot inform you," I said lamely. "She crossing the veranda, asked the roomin which direction they contemplated going.

"Where do you think?" said Alie with her best New York accent. "Well, first I guess we're going to look for a dry goods store, and then I reckon we'll just take a gascar round the town."

"You should go and see Whampoa's garden," I said, hoping she would understand what I was driving at. "They tell me it's one of the sights of the place."

"How do you get there?" asked Alie, her quick perception telling her my object. "We must know the way, I reckon, before we start, or we'll just get lost, and then you'll have to call on all the town to find us."

"One moment and I'll inquire."

Ebbington, having overheard what had passed between us, as I intended he should do, had risen, and now approached us. I turned to him and said:

"My friends want to find the way to Whampoa's garden, Mr. Ebbington. Could you direct them? But first perhaps I ought to introduce you. Mr. Ebbington, Mrs. Beecher, Miss Sanderson."

They bowed politely to each other and then Ebbington, having begged the ladies' permission, gave instructions in Malay to the rickshaw coolie, who by this time had drawn up at the steps. Tendering their thanks to him, they stepped into their conveyance and were drawn away.

When they had disappeared round the corner, Ebbington crossed the veranda and, sitting down beside me, favored me with his opinions. Even in this short space of time the charm of the heiress seemed to have impressed itself upon him. Though inwardly writhing at the tone he adopted, I had to pretend to be interested. It was a difficult matter, however, and I was more relieved than I can say when he remembered business elsewhere and betook himself off to attend to it. So far all had gone well. The bait was fixed, and it would be surprising now if the victim did not walk into the trap so artfully contrived for him.

That evening after dinner I fell into casual conversation with the proprietor of the hotel, and it was not until nearly half an hour later that I managed to escape from him and get into the veranda. When I did, to my surprise I found the ladies reclining in their chairs, listening to the conversation of Mr. Ebbington. He was regaling them with a highly colored account of his experiences in the east, and from the attention his remarks were receiving it was evident he was doing ample justice to his subject. I pulled a chair up beside Alie and listened. Within five minutes, however, of my arrival he introduced Mr. Vesey's name, and instantly she stopped him by saying:

"Now, where have I heard that name before? It seems somehow to be very familiar to me."

"Perhaps you've heard the story of his abduction by the Beautiful White Devil," said Ebbington; who saw that I was about to speak and was anxious to forestall me.

"No, I guess not," answered Alie. "I reckon I was thinking of Kleuer W. Vesey of Wall street, who operates on considerable in pork. But tell me, who is this Beautiful White Devil one hears so much about anyway?"

"There was a pause, but I held my peace and let Ebbington's tongue run riot with him.

She Knew Him.

While Charles Dudley Warner, as it I related, was a guest at an old time south ern home near Nashville he expressed a desire to see a real, typical negro. So the most loquacious old "aunt" was brought in. To the surprise of every one she would not say a word beyond "Yes, sah," or "No, sah."

After the departure of the distinguished guest she was asked the reason of her silence. With as much dignity and scorn as a grande dame "aunt" replied: "Ugh! I wa'n't gwine talk to dat Yankee. I knowed him soon's I seed him. He's de very one dat stole mistiss' silver teats de week."

Not a Beauty.

A good story is told by an exchange at the expense of an angler, who recently spent several weeks in Muskoka. Having enjoyed an unusual measure of success one day, he wired his wife: "I've got one; weighs seven pounds and is a beauty." In reply came the following, signed by his wife: "So have I. Weighs ten pounds. He isn't a beauty—looks like you."

Another Swindling Game.

C. R. Horn, is awaiting his trial at Kingston on a charge of swindling. His game was to solicit stock for the Canadian Loan & Building Association. The Rev. Mr. Shortt had confidence in him to the extent of a promissory note for $250 and $50 cash—this in payment for ten shares of the stock. Subsequently Mr. Shortt saw Horn under the influence of liquor, telegraphed to the loan company, found out that the man did not represent it, and had him arrested. The police recovered the note and $30, so that Horn's jag had just cost $20 of the clergyman's money.

Another Victory Gained.

The Cape Vincent train now waits for the R. & O. navigation company's passenger bus, if it is in sight, even though the scheduled time for leaving has arrived. This relieves the company of an inconvenience, which has troubled them during the summer. Next season the competition on the Kingston and Cape Vincent route will be keener than ever. The R. & O. N. Company's fleet steamer Island Queen will be placed on the route, and it is said, she has great speed. The Richelieu will sail on the Kingston-Gananoque route. It is rumored that the Richelieu Company will continue the Cape Vincent service during the winter, using cab sleighs for that purpose.—Whig.

A Waif and Stray.
Nettie Joslin says she is seventeen years of age, but she doesn't look to be more than fourteen. She embarked on a career of sin about one year ago and on Wednesday evening Chief Adams took her into custody. She appeared before Police Magistrate Daly on Thursday and was sentenced to two years in the Mercer reformatory with an undetermined sentence added. The expected has happened in her case. About three years ago the Joslin family drifted into town from Ernestown township. The parents maintained themselves by sending the children out begging. About a year ago the eldest girl, patterning after the mother, became a follower of the scarlet woman. A few months ago the mother skipped out with a Chinaman, named Lee, and is living with him in Perth. The father departed for Kingston a few days afterwards, leaving the children to shift for themselves. Pressure was brought to bear on him, and he consented to provide for the children with the exception of the eldest girl, Nettie, and they are now with him at Kingston. Nettie wouldn't work, and no one apparently wanted her services. Well known men in Nananee and Deseronto contributed to the girl's support, and she lived fairly high for the past few months. A two years term in the Mercer may show her the error of her ways. The Chief says that other arrests will follow if a few more of Nettie's class do not behave themselves in future. Several married women are also under surveillance.

CHURCH REUNION.
One of the most interesting events which has taken place in connection with the Church of England in the parish of Camden for years was held in Hinch's Hall, on Thursday evening, Oct. 6th, when about 150 of the church people gathered together to celebrate the 25th anniversary of the marriage of their beloved rector, Rev. F. D. Woodcock. After a pleasant evening of friendly chat and music and light refreshment. Mr. Chas. Riley mounted the platform and in his usual bright and genial manner called the attention of the people to the fact that they did not realize their strength until they began to count the cups (which had run out long before all were served) whereupon all agreed that such a mustering of church members could not have been made ten years ago, there being only four present that were not members. Then he called Mr. and Mrs. Woodcock to the platform and asked Mr. A. W. Benjamin, of Yarker, to read the address as given below and make the presentation of a well filled purse, after which Rev. Mr. Woodcock made an appropriate and fitting reply.

To the REV. F. D. WOODCOCK AND MRS. WOODCOCK, The Rectory, Camden East.

Dear Sir and Madam,—Your parishioners learn with much pleasure that you, by God's grace, have happily been permitted to celebrate the twenty fifth anniversary of your marriage, and in happy commemoration of so pleasing an event, we are commemorating together this evening to offer you our heartiest congratulations and best wishes, and trust you may long be spared to minister in our midst. It is indeed pleasant to reflect, that one third, or better, of your united bliss has been spent in our midst, in an earnest, fervent, and unceasing effort to lighten the burdens, better the conditions, and direct heavenward, the destinies of your flock; and it must be gratifying to you to be assured that you have eminently succeeded in all your endeavors. Since first you took up your pastorate among us, now nearly nine years gone by, you have drawn together the isolated parts of the parish, and by your earnest, untiring efforts, have succeeded in welding it into one harmonious whole, and have engendered a feeling of kindness, goodwill and sociability that must prove of mutual advantage to all, and redound to the welfare of the church. You have also greatly improved and advanced the temporal welfare of the parish, as is evidenced by the erection and completion of St. Jude's, St. Luke's, and St. Anthony's, three of the most beautiful churches, for their size, that grace our fair Dominion, and, while we refer with pride to these temporal monuments of your untiring energy, we experience an inward and deeper sense of your kind and loving ministrations for our souls' welfare by the older members of the church, and, while we congratulate you upon your grand achievements, we feel that a large measure of your success is due to the thoughtful, loving, kind and sympathetic nature of Mrs. Woodcock, who, while she has been a tower of strength to you in your arduous labours, has found time and opportunity to entwine herself around the hearts and affections of all your loving parishioners, as well as with all with whom she has come in contact. In thus meeting together to express unitedly our well wishes, we beg you to accept this purse as a small token of our appreciation and an earnest of our wish for your future happiness.

Signed on behalf of the congregations of the parish,

Will Likely be Tried Here.
It looks as if the Bank Robbery case will be tried at Nananee. The Crown's application for a change of venue, on the ground that a fair trial cannot be secured in Lennox & Addington, has been refused by Justice Robertson. In refusing the motion His Lordship said that the affidavits supporting the application for a change of venue show only the apprehension, belief or opinion of the deponents in the matter, and that is not sufficient. His Lordship further pointed out that the power of the Crown to challenge jurors is greater than that of the prisoners and as Lennox & Addington has a population of 39,000, a large panel may be drawn.

Lennox Election Voided.
The Petition against the election of B. E. Aylsworth, which was set down for trial at the Court House here on Monday, has been withdrawn, and the election was formally voided by Justices Falconbridge and Street at Osgoode Hall on Monday. Thos. Milburne, of Richmond township, was the only witness called. He admitted having been offered $2 for his vote by Nelson Ellsworth, an agent of the respondent. R. A. Grant, counsel for the respondent, admitted the charge, and on the evidence the court declared the election void. In dropping the protest the petitioner withdrew all the personal allegations against Mr. Aylsworth and will pay his own costs. A new election will follow and in all probability Mr. Aylsworth and Dr. Meacham will again be the opposing candidates.

In a Talking Mood.
Detective Greer, the man who announced he was on the fence during the first preliminary investigation of the charges against Ponton, has been talking to the Toronto World. He still clings to his old theory that the safe was cracked by an inside man. He says: "Pare tells a straight story, which I have proven by investigation. The only trouble is, will a jury believe him and place enough confidence in his evidence to convict?" Now if Detective Greer had as much gumption as some people credit him with, he wouldn't be conging up his insides to a reporter. What he believes won't have much bearing on the case, which must stand or fall on the evidence submitted at the trial. Mr. Greer is entitled to his opinion but is woefully lacking in judgment in giving expression to it. He further says that all the prisoners are standing their imprisonment well, although Mackie frets about his bail a good deal. Ponton, who he says, has just as many friends as ever, will not talk about his case, but leaves everything to Porter.

His Work Appreciated.
At a social gathering of the parish of Camden held in Hinch's hall, Camden East, on Thursday, October 6th, 1895, the following resolution was unanimously carried by a standing vote:
"Moved by Mr. Charles Riley, seconded by Mr. George Dunlop, that the thanks of the parish of Camden are due, and are hereby tendered to Mr. John Hopper for his faithful, efficient and self-sacrificing work as lay-reader for the past year and a half, and that it is with deep regret we hear we are to sever the connection which has been so much appreciated by us all, and has been of such advantage to the church in this parish. We know that our loss will be the gain of whatever parish you may move into. We hope and pray you may long continue to be a worker for Christ and His church, in whatever position it pleases Almighty God to place you. And that health and success may attend you and your family while here in the church militant and that you may receive a rich reward in the Great Church triumphant."

THE ISLANDERS' FAIR.
The annual fair of the Amherst Island Agricultural Society was held at Stella on Thursday, the 6th of October.
If the selection of a day had fallen to the choice of the directors and managers they could not have been better suited as the weather was bright and cheerful and no doubt added to the success of the exhibition.

Almost every inhabitant of the Island was to be seen upon the grounds, and anyone judging from the size of the Island would wonder where all the carriages came from. Stella street presented the appearance of some busy thoroughfare of a city with one exception, that in the latter the people would be for the most part bent on business whereas the Islanders were all assembled to enjoy themselves and did so to the full extent.

The Hero arrived at an early hour and brought over a number from the mainland. Some of the visitors coming from Napanee and other towns and villages around. To enumerate and pass comment on all the various classes of exhibits would be almost superfluous as the Island has a reputation for the fertility of its soil and the industry of its inhabitants which would at once account for the fine exhibits displayed in the form of agricultural products, and the fancy articles in the ladies' department.
